From the St. JAMES's CHRONICLE, June 22, 1771.

To his Grace the Duke of GRAFTON.

MY LORD,

THE profound respect I bear to the gracious Prince, who governs this country with no less honour to himself than satisfaction to his subjects, and who restores you to your rank under his standard, will save you from a multitude of reproaches. The attention I should have paid to your failings is involuntarily attracted to the hand that rewards them, and though I am not so partial to the royal judgment, as to affirm that the favour of a King can remove mountains of infamy, it serves to lessen at least, for undoubtedly it divides, the burthen. While I remember how much is due to his sacred character, I cannot, with any decent appearance of propriety, call you the meanest and basest fellow in the kingdom. I protest, my Lord, I do not think you so. You will have a dangerous rival, in that kind of fame to which you have hitherto so happily directed your ambition, as long as there is one man living who thinks you worthy of his confidence, and fit to be trusted with any share in his government. I confess you have intrinsic merit; but take care you do not value it too highly. Consider how much of it would have been lost to the world, if the King had not graciously affixed his stamp, and given it currency among his subjects. If it be true that a virtuous man, struggling with adversity, be a scene worthy of the Gods, the glorious contention, between you and the best of Princes, deserves an audience equally respectable. I think I already see other Gods rising from the earth to behold it.

But this language is too mild for the occasion. The King is determined, that our abilities shall not be lost to society. The perpetration and description of new crimes will find employment for us both. My Lord, if the persons who have been loudest in their professions of Patriotism, had done their duty to the public, with the same zeal and perseverance that I did, I will not assert that government would have recovered its dignity, but at least our gracious Sovereign must have spared his subjects this last insult, which, if there be any feeling left among us, they will resent more than even the real injuries they received from every measure of your Grace administration. In vain would he have looked round him for another character so consummate as yours. Lord Mansfield shrinks from his principles:—his ideas of government perhaps go farther than your own, but his heart disgraces the theory of his understanding. Charles Fox is yet in blossom; and as for Mr. Wedderburne, there is something about him, which even treachery cannot trust. For the present, therefore, the best of Princes must have contented himself with Lord Sandwich—You would long since have received your final dismission and reward; and I, my Lord, who do not esteem you the more for the high office you possess, would willingly have followed you to your retirement. There is surely something singularly benevolent in the character of our Sovereign. From the moment he ascended the throne there is no crime, of which hum an nature is capable (and I call upon the Recorder to witness it) that has not appeared venial in his sight. With any other Prince the shameful desertion of him, in the midst of that distress, which you alone had created,—in the very crisis of danger, when he fancied he saw the throne already surrounded by men of virtue and abilities, would have outweighed the memory of all your former services. But his Majesty is full of justice, and understands the doctrine of compensations. He remembers with gratitude how soon you had accommodated your morals to the necessities of his service,—how chearfully you had abandoned the engagements of private friendship, and renounced the most solemn professions to the public. The sacrifice of Lord Chatham was not lost upon him. Even the cowardice and perfidy of deserting him may have done you no disservice in his esteem. The instance was painful, but the principle might please.

You did not neglect the magistrate, while you flattered the man. The expulsion of Mr. Wilkes predetermined in the cabinet;—the power of depriving the subject of his birth right attributed to a resolution of one branch of the legislature;—the constitution impudently invaded by the House of Commons; the right of defending it treacherously renounced by the House of Lords:—These are the strokes, my Lord, which, in the present reign, recommend to office, and constitute a minister. They would have determined your Sovereign's judgment, if they had made no impression upon his heart. We need not look for any other species of merit to account for his taking the earliest opportunity to recall you to his councils. Yet you have other merit in abundance.—Mr. Hine—the Duke of Portland—and Mr. Yorke.—Breach of trust, robbery, and murder. You would think it a compliment to your gallantry, if I added rape to the catalogue;—but the stile of your amours secures you from resistance. I know how well these several charges have been defended. In the first instance, the breach of trust is supposed to have been its own reward. Mr. Bradshaw affirms upon his honour (and so may the gift of smiling never depart from him!) that you reserved no part of Mr. Hine's purchase-money for your own use, but that every shilling of it was scrupulously paid to Governor Burgoyne.—Make haste, my Lord; another patent, applied in time, may keep the OAKS in the family.—if not, Birnham wood, I fear, must come to the Macaroni.

The Duke of Portland was in life your earliest friend. In defence of his property he had nothing to plead, but equity against Sir James Lowther, and prescription against the Crown. You felt for your friend; but the law must take its course. Posterity will scarce believe that Lord Bute's son-in-law had barely interest enough at the treasury to get his grant completed before the general election.

Enough has been said of that detestable transaction, which existed in the days of Mr. Yorke. I cannot speak of it without horror and compassion.—To excuse yourself, you publicly impeach your accomplice, and to his mind perhaps the accusation may be flattery. But in murder you are both principals. It was once a question of emulation, and if the event had not disappointed the immediate schemes of the closet, it might still have been a hopeful subject of jest and merriment between you.

This letter, my Lord, is only a preface to my future correspondence. The remainder of the summer shall be dedicated to your amusement. I mean now and then to relieve the severity of your morning studies, and to prepare you for the business of the day. Without pretending to more than Mr. Bradshaw's sincerity, you may rely on my attachment, as long as you are in office.

Will your Grace forgive me, if I venture to express some anxiety for a man, whom I know you do not love? My Lord Weymouth has cowardice to plead, and a desertion of a later date than your own. You know the Privy Seal was intended for him; and if you consider the dignity of the post he deserted you will hardly think it decent to quarter him upon Mr. Rigby. Yet he must have bread, my Lord;—or rather, he must have wine. If you deny him the cup, there will be no keeping him within the pale of the ministry. JUNIUS.

From the St. JAMES's CHRONICLE, July 2, 1771.

SIR,

IT is undoubted that the House of Commons has for many years been degenerating into a mere appendage to the Crown. Nothing should alarm the kingdom more than this, for nothing can threaten it with greater calamities. That influence which our ministers practise on the House of Commons is indeed the worst kind of treason; and deserves to be punished with more severity than a conspiracy against the life of the King. The constitution is of more importance than the King's life; and the being of the constitution is connected with the independency of the House of Commons. When this is lost, the constitution is lost; and the state is undone.

Some time ago we were assured of the King's care not to invade those powers which the constitution has placed in other hands; and this was assigned as a reason for not dissolving the Parliament in compliance with the general desire of the kingdom. Could this declaration be seriously meant? Can there be a more fatal invasion of those powers than that which we know to be continually practised? It is indeed impossible properly to represent the abjectness of that slavery which must take place whenever, in consequence of these invasions joined to the inadequateness of the representation, the House of Commons becomes thoroughly corrupt and independent. In this state of things we should see privilege and prerogative harmoniously combining to form a system of Despotism more grievous and intolerable than any that has ever yet existed.

The end of the privilege of the House of Commons is to be a defence of the people against the crown; but, in this case, they would be converted into a defence of the crown against the people. We should see them at one time obsequiously given up, because an obstacle to ministerial tyranny; and at another time as rigidly maintained, because favourable to it.

The House of Commons, we know, claim the power not only of expelling and incapacitating any members they dislike; but of introducing others in their room, in opposition to the sense of their constituents. They likewise claim the power of arbitrarily committing, during pleasure, any members whom they judge guilty of an offence.—It appears to me, that these are powers which no body of men ought to have; but, in the state of things which I am imagining, they would transfer the whole right of election from the people to the crown, and render a minister capable at any time of modelling the House of Commons as he pleased.

But further. The House of Commons claim a power not only of commanding attendance for information; but also commanding attendance for punishment; and of dragging before them, and imprisoning without any accusation upon oath, without any trial, or even the possibility of a remedy from the laws of the kingdom, any person who shall be guilty of a contempt of them or a breach of privilege, of which privileges they are likewise the sole judges, and which, therefore, they can interpret as they will, and extend as far as they think proper.—Is it possible that there should be a worse tyranny than this may establish? Does it not invest the House of Commons with the powers of the court of Inquisition? Has it not a tendency not only to destroy the Liberty of the Press, but Liberty of Speech also; and to reduce us to the necessity of feeling slavery, without daring to give ourselves relief by a complaint or a groan? Would it, in such circumstances, give any comfort to be told, that our liberties were lost in the gulph of privilege, and not in that of prerogative; and that our oppressors bore the name of our representatives? Would not this be rather a provoking aggravation of oppression, and add insult and mockery to injury.

But to go on—In the circumstances I am imagining, the payment of the national debt, supposing it practicable, would only save us from one calamity by bringing upon us another, and a worse; for the taxes charged with it, being perpetual, and not annual, would lapse into the hands of the crown, and strengthen its power to corrupt and enslave.

The standing army, likewise, which, under the direction of a free Parliament, is nothing but an instrument of defence in the hands of the people, would, in this case, be a force maintained by enemies in the heart of the kingdom to rivet its chains, and, in conjunction with an immense revenue, would render every struggle for liberty impotent, and all hope of deliverance vain.

The power of granting money is the most important of all the powers which the constitution has vested in the House of Commons. But, in these circumstances, it would subject the whole property of the nation to the mercy of a set of court sycophants. It would be a power in the crown and its dependants levy money at their discretion, to be shared among themselves, and to pay the wages of prostitution.

Can human imagination point to itself a state of slavery more ignominious or dreadful? What can we think of those Whigs, who, under former reigns, have laid the foundation of it; and for the sake of some temporary expedients, have sacrificed the constitution for ever? I will not say how near I think we are to such a state. Our danger is great: All all who wish well to their country ought to risk every thing to remove it; by using their utmost efforts to gain a free Parliament, and to destroy that baleful influence, which, if not itself destroyed, most soon destroy the kingdom. POLITICUS.

CHARLES-TOWN, SEPTEMBER 19.

LAST Sunday Afternoon his Majesty's Frigate the Tartar, of 28 Guns, commanded by Edward Mendeves, Esq; anchored off this Bar, in nine Weeks from Plymouth, having his Excellency the Right Honourable Lord CHARLES-GREVILLE MONTAGU (our Governor) with his Lady and Son, on board. The next Day his Excellency came up in Messrs. Waldron's Pilot-Boat, and was saluted by the Tartar at his leaving her, by Fort-Johnson, when he passed it, and by the several Bastions here, and his Majesty's Ship Mercury, at his Landing. The Bells were rang upon this Occasion, from Morning till Night. And every Countenance expressed Joy and Satisfaction, upon the Return of this WORTHY GOVERNOR. His Honour the LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR and Lady waited upon his Excellency and Lady, immediately upon their Arrival, as all the principal Inhabitants, who had an Opportunity, have since done, with Compliments of Congratulation.

The Day of his Lordship's Landing being that to which the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of this Province stood prorogued (which has not done any Business this Twelve Month) they accordingly met. And this Morning his Excellency was pleased to open the Session with the following Speech:

"Honourable Gentlemen,

"Mr. Speaker, and Gentlemen of the Commons House of Assembly,

I TAKE this early Opportunity of informing you, that his Majesty has been pleased to send over by me, his Royal Instruction, confirming the temporary Boundary-Line heretofore run between this Province and North-Carolina, and also ordering it to be further extended to the Indian Boundary, in a Direction nearly similar to that which we have been soliciting for. As this is an Event of the greatest Consequence to this Province, I am perswaded, it will meet with those Returns of Duty and Gratitude to our most Gracious Sovereign, which is due for this particular Instance of his paternal Care and Attention to the Interest of this Colony.

"Gentlemen,

"The Dissentions that have so long unhappily subsisted in this Country, cannot but be very prejudicial to it in general, and the injuries arising to Individuals, from the total Stop put to Public Credit, you must all be very sensible of: I therefore flatter myself, you will now proceed to Business, with that cool Deliberation that will do Credit to yourselves, and alleviate the Hardships that many private Persons have suffered by so long a Delay. I assure you, that I am returned to this Province solicitous for the Welfare of it, and desirous of concurring with you in every Measure that may be for the Advantage of it, and that is not repugnant to the King's Instructions.

September 18, 1771. C. G. MONTAGU."

On Tuesday the Tartar came over the Bar, being in want of some Necessaries, after obtaining which Captain Meadows proceeds with her for Boston.

The Honourable Daniel Moore, Esq; and Sir John Colleton, Baronet, having resigned their Seats in Council, the Vacancies thereby occasioned have been filled up.

Since the Death of Mr. James Pratt, Mr. John Mills is appointed Messenger of the Council, and the ingenious Mr. Benjamin Lord, Door-keeper.

SUPPLEMENT to the South-Carolina GAZETTE.

[NUMB. 1873.] TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1771.

In order that His Excellency the Governor's Speech, and the Addresses of the Council and Assembly, may appear at one View, this Supplement is presented to our Readers, with the Speech re-printed.

The SPEECH of His Excellency the Right Honourable LORD CHARLES GREVILLE MONTAGU, Captain-General, Governor, and Commander in Chief, in and over His Majesty's Province of SOUTH-CAROLINA: Delivered to the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the said Province, on Wednesday the 17th of September, 1771.

" Honourable Gentlemen,
" Mr. Speaker, and Gentlemen of the Commons House of Assembly,

TAKE this early Opportunity of informing you, that his Majesty has been pleased to send over by me, his Royal Instruction, confirming the temporary Boundary-Line heretofore run between this Province and North Carolina, and also ordering it to be further extended to the Indian Boundary, in a Direction nearly similar to that which we have been soliciting for. As this is an Event of the greatest Consequence to this Province, I am persuaded, it will meet with those Returns of Duty and Gratitude to our most Gracious Sovereign, which is due for this particular Instance of his paternal Care and Attention to the Interest of this Colony.

" Gentlemen,

" The Dissentions that have so long unhappily subsisted in this Country, cannot but be very prejudicial to it in general, and the Injuries arising to Individuals, from the total Stop put to Public Credit, you must all be very sensible of: I therefore flatter myself, you will now proceed to Business, with that cool Deliberation that will do Credit to yourselves, and alleviate the Hardships that many private Persons have suffered by so long a Delay. I assure you, that I am returned to this Province solicitous for the Welfare of it, and desirous of concurring with you in every Measure that may be for the Advantage of it, and that is not repugnant to the King's Instructions.

September 18, 1771. C. G. MONTAGU."

SOUTH-CAROLINA.

The Humble ADDRESS of His Majesty's COUNCIL.

" May it please your Excellency,

WE his Majesty's most dutiful and loyal Subjects, the Council of this Province, met in General Assembly, return our Thanks to your Excellency, for your Speech delivered Yesterday to both Houses of Assembly, and beg Leave to present our most cordial Congratulations upon your safe Return to your Government.

" The Manner in which our most Gracious Sovereign has been pleased to confirm and extend the Boundary-Line between this Province and North-Carolina, is of great Importance to us, and demands our most grateful Acknowledgments.

" The unhappy Dissentions that have of late subsisted, have given us great Concern: But we flatter ourselves, they can in no Shape be imputed to us; and we beg Leave to assure your Excellency, that we shall with the utmost Chearfulness enter upon the Public Business, and concur, with the other Branches of the Legislature, in every Measure conducive to the true Interest of the Province.

" Permit us to assure your Lordship, that we feel ourselves happy in a Confidence, that your Lordship will continue that Attention to the Welfare and Prosperity of this Province, which we have hitherto experienced. At the same Time, we cannot omit this Opportunity of bearing Testimony to the Vigilance and anxious Zeal for the Public Good exerted on all Occasions by the Gentleman last in Administration.

In the Upper House of Assembly, Sept. 19, 1771. } By Order of the House,
OTHNIEL BEALE. "

The Governor's ANSWER.

" Honourable Gentlemen,

I RETURN you my most hearty Thanks for your kind Congratulations upon my Return to this Province.

" The favourable Opinion you express of my past Services to this Country, is very grateful to me, and I shall for the future endeavour to deserve the Continuance of it.

" Your Resolution to enter with Chearfulness upon the Public Business, gives me great Pleasure, and I shall most readily concur with you in every Measure calculated to promote the Interest of the Province."

September 20, 1771.

To his Excellency the Right Honourable Lord CHARLES-GREVILLE MONTAGU, Captain-General, Governor, and Commander in Chief in and over his Majesty's Province of South-Carolina;

The Humble ADDRESS of the COMMONS-HOUSE of ASSEMBLY of the said Province.

" May it please your Excellency,

WE his Majesty's dutiful and loyal Subjects, the Commons House of Assembly, now met in General Assembly, beg Leave to return our Thanks to your Excellency, for your Speech delivered Yesterday to the Council and this House, and to congratulate your Excellency upon your safe Arrival and Return, with your Family, to this your Government.

The Experience, Sir, we have heretofore had of your Conduct, the Attention and Application you have given to the Duties of your Station, the due Regard you have paid to the just Prerogatives of the Crown, not encroaching on the Privileges of the People, are the most convincing Proofs to us, that your Declaration, of being returned to this Province solicitous for the Welfare of it, is founded on the Purity and Rectitude of your Intentions, and is the Dictate of a good and benevolent Heart.

" The establishing a permanent Boundary-Line betwixt this Province and North-Carolina, is certainly an Event of great Consequence to both Provinces. The various Acts of Government, the due Administration of Justice, the right Exercise of Authority, require that the Limits of the respective Jurisdictions should be precisely ascertained: And we have the most grateful Sense of the Obligations we are under to our Gracious Sovereign, for this particular Instance of his paternal Care and Attention to the Interest of this Colony; as well as to your Excellency, for the active Part you have taken in promoting and facilitating this necessary Measure.

" The Dissentions that have so long unhappily subsisted in this Country, it must be confessed, have been prejudicial to it in general, and injurious to Individuals in particular: But we flatter ourselves, that a candid, impartial, unprejudiced Examination and Enquiry, into the original Cause which have produced them, will abundantly vindicate the Conduct of the Commons House of Assembly.

" We shall pay the utmost Deference to your Excellency's Recommendation; and will proceed to Business, with that cool Deliberation that makes the Public Welfare its chief Object, in Hopes, that the Hardships that many private Persons have suffered, may be removed; not at all doubting of your Excellency's Concurrence, in every Measure that may be for the Advantage of the Province, consistent with a due Regard to the established Mode of Proceedings, and the proper Rights of the People.

By Order of the House,
PETER MANIGAULT, Speaker.

In the Commons House of Assembly, the 19th Day of Sept. 1771. }

His Excellency's ANSWER.

" Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen,

I RETURN you many Thanks for your Congratulations upon my Return to this Province.

" The Intentions you express of immediately proceeding to Business, with that cool Deliberation that makes the Public Weal are its chief Object, cannot fail of being particularly grateful to his Majesty and myself.

" I am much flattered by your Approbation of my past Conduct, and shall always endeavour to merit the Continuance of your good Opinion. C. G. MONTAGU.

LONDON, JULY 8.

LETTERS of good authority from France say, that a dispute of much greater importance than is generally known, has for some time past subsisted between the courts of Versailles and Madrid; that it was first broached by a demand which the former made of the latter, of money to a considerable amount, to relieve her present necessities, which Spain absolutely refused. This quarrel is still to be, and unless the new Premier of France exerts his abilities to suppress it, the consequences will soon produce the ruin of the family-compact.

It is confidently said, that a treaty is on foot, with the powers concerned, to annex a valuable trading island and port, in the Levant, to the crown of Great-Britain.

The Duke of Gloucester being in a bad state of health, his physicians have recommended a southern air to his highness; in consequence of which the Venus frigate is fitting out to carry him to Lisbon.

We hear that Charles Fox, Esq; is now become a cabinet-counsellor to a Great Personage.

The question of the Middlesex election will certainly be brought on again at the meeting of Parliament, in a manner, and from a quarter, at present little suspected.

They write from Bristol, that a ball and entertainment was given at the Guild of that city, on Tuesday night last, in honour of Mr. Wilkes's election: Some gentlemen of the town, who opposed it, were roughly handled by the populace.

Extract of a Letter from the Hague, July 2.

" We have just received advice here, that not only frigates, but likewise all ships of war, without distinction, of every nation, are forbidden by the King of Spain to enter into any of the ports of his states; and we are assured his motives for this step are, that it has been perceived for a long time past, that ships which are not subject to visitation, have greatly abused the permission granted them by the Spanish monarch of putting into his ports, by exporting not only a great quantity of gold and silver, in money and ingots, but also by carrying on a contraband trade with the inhabitants, which has greatly prejudiced the revenues of the crown."

A cabinet-council was summoned this very morning for Thursday next, to take some late letters, in the public Prints, into consideration; doctrines of a treasonable nature being strongly inculcated in these productions.

Though several addresses from the city have been presented since Mr. Wilkes's enlargement from the King's-Bench, that gentleman from motives of delicacy, we hear, has not attended any one; and it is thought the same considerations will lead him to be absent to-morrow, from a presence where he would be particularly obnoxious.

Mr. Wilkes, says a correspondent, in his North-Briton, reproached the University of Oxford for choosing the late Lord Westmoreland their Chancellor, because he was the most personally disagreeable man in the kingdom to King George the Second. This reflection, adds our correspondent, will fall with equal weight on the loyalty of his own followers, who chose him Sheriff of London, for being the most personally disagreeable man in the kingdom to his present Majesty.

The guards are ordered to be in constant readiness to quell any disorders which may happen to-morrow.

Many people having condemned the Lord Mayor's advertisement relative to the time of his setting out for St. James's to-morrow, it is but justice to his Lordship to inform the public, that at the common-hall on Midsummer-day, he was requested to give the most early, and the most general notice of the day appointed by his Majesty for receiving the remonstrance; and consequently the notice which he gives in the Prints is no more than a compliance with the wishes of the livery.

JULY 10.

The Earl of Rochford is said to have sent a very spirited memorial to the French court, insisting on the immediate payment of the money due on account of the Canada paper; and that a firm resolution is at length taken, that this matter shall no longer remain the disgrace of our public conduct, and a stain on the national honour.

A noble Lord, who wagered a considerable sum that Mr. Wilkes would not be one of the Sheriffs, has refused to pay the bett till the patriot is sworn into his office, and offers to make any stake whatever, that some court manœuvre will be yet made use of, before that period arrives, to prevent him from serving.

Extract of a Letter from Legborn, dated June 9.

" We have just received advice from Malta, that an English merchant ship, named the Anglican, having taken on board at Smyrna about three hundred Turks, mostly traders, whom he was to carry to Alexandria, and who had with them a considerable sum of money, was met by a Russian corsair, who ordered him him to bring to. The English captain, having his colours flying, took no notice of the order, but sailed on his destined rout; however, the Russian having joined a frigate of war of his nation, they both attacked, some hours after, the English, who after an engagement of three hours, in which he received great damage in his masts and rigging, was obliged to surrender. This advice comes farther confirmed in a letter from a merchant at Malta to his correspondent here, with orders to buy up great part of the cargo on his account, if it should be brought in to this place."

JULY 11.

Yesterday morning his Majesty came from Richmond, and gave audience to several of the ministry, and principal officers of state, previous to his receiving the address, remonstrance and petition of the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, &c.

A meeting of several of the Aldermen and Common Council was held on Tuesday afternoon at Guildhall, when the affair relative to the Common Council accompanying the Lord Mayor and Aldermen to St. James's yesterday, with the city remonstrance, was the subject of consideration.

The following copy of a letter was received on Tuesday night at eleven o'clock, by the Right Honourable the Lord Mayor, from the Earl of Hertford, Lord Chamberlain.

My LORD,

As in consequence of the notice given of the time your Lordship purposes setting out to-morrow, the Livery may be induced to attend your Lordship to St. James's, I have the King's command to acquaint you, that it being unprecedented to admit the Livery upon such occasions, as well as impracticable, to introduce so numerous a body, no persons beyond the number allowed by law to present petitions to the throne, will be admitted, except your Lordship, the Aldermen, Common Council, and the city officers. I am, &c. HERTFORD.

Yesterday morning the Lord Mayor caused copies of the above letter to be stuck up in divers parts of the city, that the Livery might be acquainted with the same.

Yesterday, between twelve and one o'clock, the Lord Mayor attended by Aldermen Stephenson, Trecothick, Sawbridge, Townsend and Oliver, Sir James Hodges, and the other city officers (excepting the Recorder) and many of the Common Councilmen, Mr. Bull, and several of the Livery, went to St. James's, and presented to his Majesty, the Remonstrance of the city of London.

The following is said to be the purpor of his Majesty's answer: That already two petitions had been presented to him upon the same subject, to which he had given answers sufficiently known; that the additional articles in this, could not induce him to alter his opinion, much less to condemn the conduct of his Parliament, which he had so much approved in his last speech from the throne; and that having no less a thorough confidence in the loyalty and candour of that body, than in the uprightness and fidelity of his ministers, he could not comply with their prayer and request.

While the King, in one respect, adheres so religiously to an obsolete law, why does he suffer it to be violated with regard to the Aldermen? Are not the Livery as much his subjects as the Aldermen? A prince should never seem afraid of his people.

The names of the islands in the Archipelago, which have been conquered and subjected, with all the inhabitants thereon, to her Imperial Majesty of all the Russias; Satorin, Naharia, Policandro, Milo, Argentero, Bieles, Scanim, Nio, Strajalia, Morgo, Serfanto, Serfano, Tirmiye, Zea, Sira, Antijaris, Paras, with the port Ausa, Nixia, Delos, Andro, Tino Micol, and between the islands Schio and Schiro, the island Peser or Spsar.

The Kings of Denmark and Sweden, by their readiness to hear the petitions of their subjects, have set a glorious example to the rest of the Sovereigns of Europe.

From the WHITEHALL EVENING-POST, July 9.

To his Grace the Duke of GRAFTON.

MY LORD,

THE influence of your Grace's fortune still seems to preside over the treasury.—The genius of Mr. Bradshaw inspires Mr. Robinson. How remarkable it is (and I speak of it not as a matter of reproach, but as something peculiar to your character) that you have never yet formed a friendship which has not been fatal to the object of it, nor adopted a cause, to which one way or other, you have not done mischief. Your attachment is infamy while it lasts, and which ever way it turns, leaves ruin and disgrace behind it. The deluded girl who yields to such a profligate, even while he is constant, forfeits her reputation as well as her innocence, and finds herself abandoned at last to misery and shame—Thus it happened with the best of Princes.—Poor Dingley too!—I protest I hardly know which of them we ought most to lament:—The unhappy man, who sinks under the sense of his dishonour, or him who survives it. Characters, so finished, are placed beyond the reach of panegyric. Death has fixed his seal upon Dingley; and you, my Lord, have set your mark upon the other.

The only letter I ever addressed to the King was so unkindly received, that I believe I shall never presume to trouble his Majesty, in that way, again. But my zeal for his service is superior to neglect, and, like Mr. Wilkes's patriotism, thrives by persecution. Yet his Majesty is much addicted to useful reading, and, if I am not ill-informed, has honoured this paper with particular attention. I hvae endeavoured therefore, and not without success (as perhaps you may remember) to furnish it with such interesting and edifying intelligence, as probably would not reach him through any other channel. The services you have done the nation, your integrity in office, and signal fidelity to your approved good master, have been faithfully recorded. Nor have his own virtues been intirely neglected. These letters, my Lord, are read in other countries, and in other languages; and I think I may affirm without vanity, that the gracious character of the best of Princes is by this time not only perfectly known to his subjects, but tolerably well understood by the rest of Europe. In this respect alone, I have the advantage of Mr. Whitehead. His plan, I think, is too narrow. He seems to manufacture his verses for the sole use of the hero who is supposed to be the subject of them; and, that his meaning may not be unlawfully exported in foreign bottoms, sets all translation at defiance.

Your Grace's re-appointment to a seat in the cabinet was announced to the public by the ominous return of Lord Bute to this country. When that noxious planet approaches England, he never fails to bring plague and pestilence along with him.—The King already feels the malignant effect of your influence over his councils. Your former administration made Mr. Wilkes an Alderman of London, and Representative of Middlesex.—Your next appearance in office is marked with his election to the Shrievalty. In whatever measure you are concerned, you are not only disappointed of success, but always contrive to make the government of the best of Princes contemptible in his own eyes, and ridiculous to the whole world. Making all due allowance for the effect of the minister's declared interposition, Mr. Robinson's activity, and Mr. Horne's new zeal in support of administration, we still want the genius of the Duke of Grafton to account for committing the whole interest of government in the city to the conduct of Mr. Harley. I will not bear hard upon your faithful friend and emissary Mr. Touchet, for I know the difficulties of his situation, and that a few lottery tickets are of use to his œconomy. There is a proverb concerning persons in the predicament of this gentleman, which however cannot be strictly applied to him. They commence dupes, and finish knaves. Now, Mr. Touchet's character is uniform. I am convinced that his sentiments never depended upon his circumstances, and that, in the most prosperous state of his fortune, he was always the very man he is at present.—But was there no other person of rank and consequence in the city whom government could confide in, but a notorious Jacobite? Do you imagine that the whole body of the Dissenters, that the whole Whig-interest of London, would attend at the levy, and submit to the directions of a notorious Jacobite? Was there no Whig magistrate in the city, to whom the servants of George the Third could intrust the management of a business so very interesting to their master as the election of Sheriffs? Is there no room at St. James's but for Scotchmen and Jacobites?—My Lord, I do not mean to question the sincerity of Mr. Harley's attachment to his Majesty's government. Since the commencement of the present reign, I have seen still greater contradictions reconciled. The principles of these worthy Jacobites are not so absurd as they have been represented. Their ideas of divine right are not so much annexed to the person and family, as to the political character of the Sovereign. Had there ever been an honest man among the Stuarts, his Majesty's present friends would have been Whigs upon principle. But the conversion of the best of Princes has removed their scruples. They have forgiven him the sins of his Hanoverian ancestors, and acknowledge the hand of Providence in the descent of the crown upon the head of a true Stuart. In you, my Lord, they also behold, with a kind of predilection which borders upon loyalty, the natural representative of that illustrious family. The mode of your descent from Charles the Second is only a bar to your pretensions to the crown, and no way interrupts the regularity of your succession to all the virtues of the Stuarts.

The unfortunate success of the Reverend Mr. Horne's endeavours, in support of the ministerial nomination of Sheriffs, will I fear obstruct his preferment. Permit me to recommend him to your Grace's protection. You will find him copiously gifted with those qualities of the heart, which usually direct you in the choice of your friendships. He too was Mr. Wilkes's friend, and as incapable as you are of the liberal resentment of a gentleman. No, my Lord;—it was the solitary, vindictive malice of a Monk, brooding over the infirmities of his friend, until he thought they quickened into public life; and feasting, with rancorous rapture, upon the sordid catalogue of his distresses. Now, let him go back to his cloister. The church is a proper retreat for him. In his principles he is already a Bishop.

The mention of this man has moved me from my natural moderation. Let me return to your Grace. You are the pillow, upon which I am determined to rest all my resentments. What idea can the best of Sovereigns form to himself of his own government;—in what repute can he conceive that he stands with his people, when he sees, beyond the possibility of a doubt, that whatever be the office, the suspicion of his favour is fatal to the candidate; and that when the party he wishes well to has the fairest prospect of success, if his Royal Inclination should unfortunately be discovered, it drops like an acid, and turns the election? This event, among others, may perhaps contribute to open his Majesty's eyes to his real honour and interest. In spite of all your Grace's ingenuity, he may at last perceive the inconvenience of selecting, with such a curious felicity, every villain in the nation to fill the various departments of his government. Yet I should be sorry to confine him in the choice either of his footmen or his friends. JUNIUS.
